

Total Annual Job Openings by Occupational Family

An Occupational Focus

The Standard Occupational Coding (SOC) system produced by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics consists of broad occupational families, which provide a general description of occupations within a specific family. These classifications can give you an idea of what types of occupations are in-demand, especially if you have only a general idea of the type of occupation you would like to go into. Displayed below are the projected numbers of total annual openings of in-demand occupations within each occupational family.

In-demand occupations are projected to provide about 62,529 job openings each year.